In order to be able to inspect the ships underwater parts, avoiding dry-dock, the classification societies have developed the underwater inspection. The underwater inspection is performed by certified divers where with the help of video cameras and surface monitor provide monitoring to the surface.

Our divers take photos and videotape the whole in-water survey of a ship, so that the customer has a complete picture of the hull condition and if needed to make the necessary repairs. Also enables two-way communication between the diver and the inspector or customer's chief engineer and real time monitoring (CCTV). During the underwater inspection clearance measurements are also taken of the rudder pintels and tail-end shaft wear down measurements.
